Nigeria has kicked against the United Nations' resolution that endorsed the rights of gay, lesbian and transgendered people, warning that the world body could turn into a "guinea pig" of policies that cannot be implemented by member states. Nigeria's vote was, however, not enough to defeat the resolution which was passed by the Geneva-based Council with 23 votes in favor, 19 against and three abstentions.

The resolution brought forward by South Africa was supported by the United States, the European Union and Latin American countries. Nigeria, which spoke on behalf of the African group at the council, was prominent among the nations that voted against it, including Russia, Saudi Arabia and Pakistan.

Speaking on behalf of the Africa group, Nigeria's representative at the Council Ositadinma Anaedu said

African countries, and more than 90% of African people don't support the resolution.

BRITISH-NIGERIAN COUNCILLORS PLEDGED SUPPORT FOR ETHNIC MINORITIES.

The Association of British-Nigerian councilors have pledged support for ethnic minorities, Including Nigerians living in the United Kingdom. Councilor Adedamola Aminu, the newly Elected chairman of the association, gave the pledge at the association's annual general meeting and election of its officials in London. According to the relevant 2007 statistics, nearly 31% of London's population is from ethnic minority communities.

Aminu said the association would tackle among other things, the incessant violence and gun

Killing of youths, especially in the Nigerian community. He also said, they will raise these concerns with the appropriate authorities and agencies, including the central government of the United Kingdom, with a view to finding long lasting solutions to them. He expressed concern over the under-representation of the ethnic minorities in decision making bodies in the United Kingdom and urged members of the community, especially Nigerians, to show more interest in politics.
